Democrats Sweep State Elections

Democrats captured the Illinois Senate and kept control of the House for the 93rd General Assembly. The House will have 66 Democratic and 52 Republican members; the Senate will have 32 Democrats, 26 Republicans, and 1 Independent.

Democrats also won all but one statewide executive office (Treasurer), as well as the U.S. Senate seat that was up for election. But in the only U.S. House race in which incumbents faced each other, Republican John Shimkus defeated Democrat David Phelps for district 19 in southern Illinois.

In an upset in the General Assembly races, Democratic challenger John Sullivan defeated Senator Laura Kent Donahue of Quincy for the 47th Senate district. The Senate will also get its first member in many years who is not affiliated with a political party: Rev. James T. Meeks of Calumet City, who pastors a church in Chicago.

Perhaps the most striking thing about the November 2002 election results was the large number of new members. The Senate will get eight totally new members (six Democrats, one Republican, and one independent). In addition, seven current representatives and one former representative (four Democrats and four Republicans) are moving to the Senate; and one Republican appointed to the Senate in the 92nd General Assembly has been elected to the 93rd. The House will get 24 totally new members (14 Democrats and 10 Republicans); three (two Democrats and one Republican) who were appointed to the 92nd General Assembly; one Democratic senator who is moving to the House; and one former Republican representative returning to the House.
